Leak Reveals Secret World Of Pro-Russia Hacking Gang

hospitals. "There will be panic," the hacker wrote, in Russian. It was 2020, at a severe point in the pandemic, and the gang planned to hold hostage the computer systems of the hospitals, many of which were fighting to save Covid-19 patients. U.S. authorities and cybersecurity researchers foiled large parts of the plan, warning hospitals before the hackers' ransomware could be installed, but the hackers shrugged off the setback, according to a cache of data and documents leaked online in recent weeks.

The hacking enterprise, called the Trickbot Group by federal prosecutors, and its affiliates had already collected hundreds of millions of dollars by shutting down emergency rooms, city governments and public schools since 2018. "I find it all funny," wrote a Trickbot hacker who used the pseudonym "target," in a message, after the plan was thwarted, to "stern," the group's leader and paymaster.

This wide-open view of the inner workings of what is perhaps the world's biggest and most dangerous organized cyberberme group is a surprising consequence of the war in Ukraine. An anonymous researcher who had infiltrated the group's servers, and who identified himself as Ukrainian, posted the data on Twitter on Feb. 27. "Ukraine will Rise!" he then wrote in a March 2 tweet. Security researchers and U.S. officials say the internal conversations amount to the most complete and candid public look yet at the operations of a criminal ransomware enterprise. U.S. authorities have been tracking the Trickbot group, but little was known publicly about its operations and internal deliberations before the cache of documents surfaced.

Suspected Poisoning Sickened Abramovich

By Yaroslav Trofimov and Max Colchester

Russian oligarch Roman Abramovich and Ukrainian peace negotiators suffered symptoms of suspected poisoning after a meeting in Kyiv this month, people familiar with the matter said.

Mr. Abramovich, Ukrainian lawmaker Rustem Umerov and another negotiator developed symptoms following the March 3 meeting in Kyiv that included red eyes, constant and painful tearing, and peeling skin on their faces and hands, the people said. Mr. Abramovich has shuttled between Moscow, Belarus and other negotiating venues since Russia invaded Ukraine.

Mr. Abramovich was blinded for a few hours and later had trouble eating, a person familiar with the matter said.

Some of the people familiar with the matter blamed the suspected attack on hard-liners in Moscow who they said wanted to sabotage talks to end the war. A person close to Mr. Abramovich said it wasn't clear who had targeted the group.

Mr. Abramovich and others involved in the incident have since improved, and their lives aren't in danger, the people said. President Volodymyr Zelensky of Ukraine, who has met with Mr. Abramovich, wasn't affected, they said. Mr. Zelensky's spokesman said he had no information about any suspected poisoning. "I'm fine," Mr. Umerov tweeted on Monday.

President Proposes Military Spending Increase in Budget

By Amara Omeokwe and Andrew Duerksen

WASHINGTON—President Biden called for the largest-ever level of military spending and increased funding for law enforcement in a $5.8 trillion budget, playing down his proposals for expanding social programs in favor of backing initiatives generally favored by centrist lawmakers.

The budget, released Monday, also seeks higher taxes on businesses and the nation's wealthiest people, part of an emphasis on reducing the federal deficit that departs from last year's budget that laid out ambitious spending increases. The shift comes as much of Mr. Biden's agenda has been stalled in Congress, which ultimately will craft the government's spending and tax plans. The Russian invasion of Ukraine, Mr. Biden's decline in opinion polls and decades-high inflation have combined to pull many Democrats toward issues they see as better resonating with voters in a midterm election year. "Here's what this all adds up to: Historic deficit reduction, historic investment in our security at home and abroad by modernizing our capabilities Please turn to page A4

Debt-Sale Flub Costs Barclays $591 Million

By Anna Hirtenstein

Barclays PLC said it is buying back a slug of structured notes at a loss of about $450 million, or $591 million, after selling too many of them.

Structured notes are a type of debt instrument that is linked to an underlying reference asset such as the S&P 500 or oil. The British bank had registered with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission to sell up to $20.8 billion of these notes. It exceeded the limit by $15.2 billion, the company said.

Barclays said it is conducting a review of the matter. Regulators, too, are "conducting inquiries and making requests for information," the bank said. As a result, the bank plans to delay the start of its $1 billion share-buyback program to the second quarter.

Barclays shares fell about 4% in London on Monday. The firm's American depositary receipts fell 11% in New York.

Expensive flubs are rare in the world of banking, which is built upon a web of technology, policies and procedures designed to nearly eliminate the risk of human error. But mistakes happen.

Citigroup Inc. accidentally sent $900 million in 2020 to creditors of cosmetics company Revlon Inc. Last year, the U.K. arm of Banco Santander SA mistakenly paid out £130 million into thousands of random accounts.

Barclays is known for its large fixed-income business, so the mistake is especially surprising, analysts and investors struggled to make sense of the announcement. "I've seen a lot of structured note issuance but I've never seen this kind of matter before," said Joseph Dickerson, an equity-research analyst at

Biden plans military spending surge in $5.8tn budget proposal

◆ 10% boost for Pentagon ◆ Tax crackdown on wealthy ◆ Lower prescription drug costs

COLBY SMITH AND JAMES POLITI — WASHINGTON

US president Joe Biden has proposed increasing the country's military funding by almost 10 per cent as part of new measures to boost the Pentagon's response to Russia's war on Ukraine.

The proposal is part of a sweeping $5.8tn budget plan that includes a tax crackdown on the richest Americans.

The White House said Biden would ask Congress to increase spending for the defence department by $69bn in the coming fiscal year, to a total of $773bn.

"Of this, $6.9bn would be specifically earmarked to support Ukraine and enhance the capabilities and readiness of the Nato alliance in the region, as well as additional funding to enhance US 'deterrence' in the Indo-Pacific.

The budget also included a minimum tax on the investment income of the richest Americans as well as restrictions on share buybacks.

The new proposal on military spending underscores how the Biden administration has been forced to prioritise national security even as it tries to push through the rest of its economic agenda, with high inflation its biggest vulnerability heading into midterm elections.

In the projections accompanying the budget, the White House said the consumer price index would drop from its four-decade-high pace of 7.9 per cent to 4.7 per cent by the end of this year, before halving to 2.5 per cent next year.

No big fall in growth or employment is forecast, with the White House suggesting that the economy would continue to expand. The jobless rate is expected to dip to 3.6 per cent in 2023 before settling at its current level of 3.8 per cent.

"It fights inflation and helps families deal with rising costs by growing our economy, making more goods in America and lowering the costs families face," Biden said in a letter to Congress.

Biden's budget seeks to resurrect initiatives at the heart of a massive social spending plan that has run into opposition from members of his own party, namely Joe Manchin, the moderate Democrat from West Virginia. It aims to lower costs for prescription drugs and other healthcare expenses.

It also calls for investments to combat climate change and includes extra policing funding in a bid to blunt criticism that the White House is lax on crime.

Joe Biden says his plan will 'fight inflation and help families deal with rising costs by growing our economy'

To pay for the plan, the blueprint aims to target the investment income of the wealthiest Americans to help cut the deficit. It will require households worth more than $100m to pay a minimum 20 per cent tax on all income. That is forecast to cut the deficit by $560bn in the next decade.

Combined with the other measures outlined in the budget, that total grows to $1tn, the administration said.

The president also reiterated his plans to increase ordinary income taxes on households earning more than $400,000 and raising corporate income taxes to 28 per cent.

Biden is also taking aim at share buybacks by top executives, with a proposal to ban them from selling shares in the years after those repurchases.

Shale industry bottlenecks foil hopes for output surge

The Biden administration's hopes that shale drillers could open the taps and rescue drivers facing record petrol prices have crashed into the reality of industry bottlenecks. A shortage of essential labour and equipment as well as the need to persuade investors to target growth again means any big increase is a year away. A key problem is a lack of the sand used in the drilling process after the pandemic downturn bankrupted suppliers and shut mines. Into the sand — PAGE 10

Abramovich and Ukraine officials in suspected poisoning after peace talks

MAX SEDDON — RIGA
ROMAN OLEARCHIVE — KYIV

Roman Abramovich, the billionaire Russian owner of Chelsea Football Club, and two Ukrainian officials suffered poisoning symptoms in Kyiv in early March after peace talks with Russia, according to three people familiar with the matter.

Abramovich's eyesight "completely disappeared" for several hours while a member of the Ukrainian delegation, lawyer Rustem Umerov, partially lost his sight, two of the people said.

"People became totally blind... the next day," said a person close to Volodymyr Zelensky, Ukraine's president. "We did not identify the substance. No idea who was behind [the attack] — but it looks like Roman was the main target."

Abramovich's suspected poisoning came after a round of peace talks this month between Russian and Ukrainian delegations, which the oligarch helped broker with the approval of Russian president Vladimir Putin and Zelensky.

The Ukraine delegates met their Russian counterparts on Ukraine's border with Belarus on March 3, then travelled to Kyiv. Beginning that evening, the three men also suffered other symptoms including eye inflammation, severe pain in the eyes and peeling skin.

Abramovich and Umerov received medical treatment in Turkey where their eyesight recovered, two of the people said. Doctors and chemical weapons experts were unable to identify the substance used, the three people said.

"They couldn't work out who did it — the Ukrainians or the Russians," one of the people said, adding that it was "definitely not novichok" — referring to the substance used to poison Kremlin opponents such as jailed dissident Alexei Navalny and former spy Sergei Skripal.

Abramovich later travelled to Kyiv to meet Zelensky — who was not affected — a second time, two people familiar with the matter said.

The three first experienced symptoms after consuming only water and chocolate on the evening of the talks, according to investigative site Bellingcat, which said it had been asked to bring in chemical weapons specialists to examine the men.

"The experts concluded that the symptoms are most likely the result of international poisoning with an undefined chemical weapon," Bellingcat said.

Abramovich's poisoning was first reported by the Wall Street Journal. Representatives for Abramovich, Putin and Zelensky all declined to comment.

'I Make No Apologies,' Biden Says of Condemning Putin

Ukraine Says It's Retaken Land Near Kyiv — No Shift in U.S. Policy

By ANDREW E. KRAMER and STEVEN ERLANGER

KYIV, Ukraine — Ukrainians on Monday reported that they had pushed back invading Russian forces in fierce fighting around Kyiv and in northeastern Ukraine, while the Russians moved to encircle and cut off Ukrainian forces in the east, making a diplomatic resolution to the war seem as far away as ever.

Ukrainian counterattacks around Kyiv reportedly retook more ground, with the mayor of Irpin, a fiercely contested suburb on the northwestern edge of the capital, saying that most Russian troops had retreated, though fighting continued in some districts. If Ukrainian soldiers can maintain control of Irpin, it would be strategically important to keeping their hold on Kyiv.

"Our Irpin is liberated from Moscow's evil," Mayor Oleksandr Markushin of Irpin posted on Telegram on Monday. But the deputy police chief, Oleksandr Bogai, offered a more skeptical account in a telephone interview, noting that fighting continued even as most Russian troops appeared to have pulled back, and that the Russians continued to shell the town.

Diplomacy between the warring countries continued, with Russian and Ukrainian delegations arriving in Istanbul for another round of talks set to begin on Tuesday.

While Volodymyr Zelensky, the Ukrainian president, has said that he is open to discussing the future neutrality of Ukraine, if he can get security guarantees for his country and only after a national referendum, he has refused to concede territory to Russia or to the self-declared republics in the southeastern region known as the Donbas, as President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia has demanded.

In Washington, President Biden on Monday stood by comments he made Saturday about Mr. Putin, "for God's sake, this man cannot remain in power." Speaking to reporters, Mr. Biden said the remark, apparently ad-libbed in a speech he delivered in Warsaw, was an expression of his personal outrage, not a statement of a U.S. policy that the Russian leader should be toppled.

On the battlefield, in addition to gains around Kyiv, the Ukrainians also reported important progress in the Sumy region, northwest of Kharkiv, near the border with Russia.

By MICHAEL D. SHEAR

WASHINGTON — President Biden on Monday stood by his comment that Vladimir V. Putin should not remain president of Russia, but he said it was an expression of his own horror over the invasion of Ukraine and not a change in American policy aimed at seeking to remove Mr. Putin from office.

"I was expressing the moral outrage that I feel, and I make no apologies for it," Mr. Biden told reporters at the White House, rejecting criticism from around the globe in the last two days about the potential diplomatic consequences of his words. The president said no one should have interpreted his comments as calling for Mr. Putin's ouster.

"It's ridiculous," he said of the questions about his speech in Warsaw on Saturday, when he said, "For God's sake, this man cannot remain in power." On Monday, Mr. Biden said, "Nobody believes I was talking about taking down Putin."

The fallout over Mr. Biden's words in Warsaw underscored the dilemma that he and the NATO allies face about how to condemn the war in Ukraine and pressure Russia without shutting down any relationship with Moscow that might help end the invasion.

The West will also have to decide whether Moscow would be allowed back into the global economy, whether to lift sanctions and how to resume diplomatic relations if Russia pulls back its forces.

Mr. Biden's remark drew some praise for its toughness and clarity but also warnings from lawmakers and President Emmanuel Macron of France, who said on Sunday that "I wouldn't use this kind of words" when asked about Mr. Biden's speech.

Mr. Biden said he hoped to obtain a ceasefire and the withdrawal of Russian troops from Ukraine through diplomacy.

Some critics said Mr. Biden's declaration could make it more difficult to negotiate an end to the five-week-old war, which has killed thousands in Ukraine and driven millions from their homes.

Mr. Biden insisted on Monday that was not the case, although Mr. Putin has told Russians for years that he believes the United States and the C.I.A. are conspiring to remove him from power.

Dmitri S. Peskov, the Kremlin's spokesman, said on Monday that Mr. Biden's remarks were "a provocation."

Biden's Budget Tilts Priorities Toward Center

This article is by Zolan Kanno-Youngs, Alan Rappeport and Emily Cochrane.

WASHINGTON — President Biden on Monday proposed a $5.8 trillion budget that includes significant increases in funding for the military and police departments, along with higher taxes on corporations and the wealthiest Americans.

The request to Congress for fiscal 2023 reflects growing security and economic concerns at home and overseas, with Mr. Biden proposing a 7 percent increase in domestic spending that includes priorities like anti-gun violence initiatives, affordable housing and manufacturing investments to address supply chain issues that have helped fuel rapid inflation.

The White House also for the first time proposed a discrete stream of funding for Veterans Affairs medical care.

The most notable spending increase was Mr. Biden's $773 billion military proposal, a 10 percent rise amid threats like Russia's invasion of Ukraine and concerns about China's ambitions.

The request included billions to detect and intercept missiles from hostile nations like North Korea and Iran, along with $6.9 billion to help NATO counter threats from Russia and elsewhere amid the war launched by President Vladimir V. Putin.

The White House budget proposal put far less emphasis on the types of grand social, climate and economic policies that Mr. Biden announced last year but have since run into resistance from moderate Democrats.

Instead, the budget continued the president's pivot from his State of the Union address, where he reframed a domestic agenda that focused less on the sweeping aspirations of his first year in office and more on issues worrying swing-state Democrats ahead of the midterm elections — including rising consumer prices, crime and health care.

That shift is a nod to centrists in Congress.

Federal Judge Signals Trump Committed Crimes

This article is by Luke Broadwater, Alan Feuer and Maggie Haberman.

WASHINGTON — A federal judge ruled on Monday that former President Donald J. Trump and a lawyer who had advised him on how to overturn the 2020 election most likely had committed felonies, including obstructing the work of Congress and conspiring to defraud the United States.

The judge's comments in the civil case of the lawyer, John Eastman, marked a significant breakthrough for the House committee investigating the Jan. 6 attack on the Capitol.

Boost for Jan. 6 Panel as It Weighs Referral to Justice Dept.

The committee, which is weighing making a criminal referral to the Justice Department, had used a filing in the case to lay out the crimes it believed Mr. Trump might have committed.

Mr. Trump has not been charged with any crime, and the judge's ruling had no immediate, practical legal effect on him. But it essentially ratified the committee's argument that Mr. Trump's efforts to block Congress from certifying Joseph R. Biden Jr.'s Electoral College victory could well rise to the level of a criminal conspiracy.

"The illegality of the plan was obvious," wrote Judge David O. Carter of the Central District of California. "Our nation was founded on the peaceful transition of power, epitomized by George Washington laying down his sword to make way for democratic elections. Ignoring this history, President Trump vigorously campaigned for the vice president to single-handedly determine the re-

Putin's Brutal Playbook Honed On Chechnya's Ravaged Streets

By CARLOTTA GALL

KYIV, Ukraine — In Ukraine's capital, Kyiv, amid the deadly rumble of heavy Russian artillery, there is much that feels familiar. Not least a terrible feeling of dread.

Nearly 30 years ago, I was in Grozny, the capital of Chechnya, a territory in southern Russia that dared declare independence from Moscow as the Soviet Union was breaking apart. The Chechens paid heavily for their presumption. The Russian Army twice invaded and twice flattened the city in what has become a familiar Russian playbook for imposing control over outlying regions of the former Russian empire and bludgeoning people into submission.

Ukraine is very different from Chechnya, which was a small territory of just one million people in the North Caucasus.

Ukraine is a sovereign nation with a population of more than 40 million, an armed force of over 200,000 troops and a capital city of three million or more inhabitants.

But Chechnya's experience is worth recalling, as it was the first time we saw Vladimir V. Putin develop his game plan to reassert Russian dominion wherever he wanted. His methods are brute force and terror: the bombing and besieging of cities, the deliberate targeting of civilians and the abduction and jailing of local leaders and journalists and their replacement by loyal quislings. The tactics are straight out of Stalin's playbook, as former Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright wrote shortly before her death.

The war in Chechnya began

Trump probably broke law, judge finds

Assertion about efforts to block Biden's win comes in ruling on emails issue

BY MATT ZAPOTOSKY AND JOHN WAGNER

A federal judge said Monday that then-President Donald Trump "more likely than not" was assisting with crimes in trying to obstruct the congressional count of electoral college votes on Jan. 6, 2021 — an assertion that is likely to increase public pressure on the Justice Department to investigate the former commander in chief.

The determination from U.S. District Judge David O. Carter came in a ruling addressing scores of sensitive emails that Trump ally and conservative lawyer John Eastman had resisted turning over to the House select committee investigating the Jan. 6 riot and related efforts to overturn the 2020 presidential election result.

Eastman wrote key legal memos aimed at denying Democrat Joe Biden's victory. The judge was assessing whether Eastman's communications were protected by attorney-client privilege and was analyzing in part whether Eastman, Trump and others had consulted about the commission of a crime.

"Based on the evidence, the court finds it more likely than not that President Trump corruptly attempted to obstruct the Joint Session of Congress on January 6, 2021," wrote Carter, who is based in California and has jurisdiction over the case, where Eastman filed the case.

Trump spokesman Taylor Budowich called the ruling "absurd and baseless" and said it was an example of "how the left is weaponizing every branch of government against President Trump."

Ukraine claws back territory in north

Firefighters in Kharkiv, Ukraine, respond to a warehouse blaze caused by Russian shelling. Intelligence officials say Moscow seems to be changing tactics to focus most intensely on the eastern Donbas region after attempts to topple Kyiv and other key cities have stalled.

Ukrainian forces have reclaimed control of a few small fronts in the country's north, officials said Monday, as Russia appears to be directing its fiercest attacks on besieged areas in the country's east and south, including Mariupol.

As the war winds into its second month, Ukrainian and Russian delegations are set to meet in Turkey on Tuesday for in-person negotiations. Kremlin officials have delivered icy remarks ahead of the talks, however, dampening prospects of a meaningful outcome. Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov

Russian gas still flows in the pipes of war-torn areas

BY STEVEN MUFSON

Yuriy Vitrenko, the chief executive of Ukraine's natural gas utility Naftogaz, had just made it down to an air raid shelter Saturday, along with three of his board members. He wouldn't disclose the location because he wanted to avoid Russian troops or missiles — three of which had just landed within earshot.

One month into the war, the state-owned gas company provides a window into the conflict's geopolitics and the extent of Ukraine's destruction. Naftogaz serves 12 million households, Vitrenko said, but it has been forced to cut off 300,000 that have been heavily damaged by Russian missiles.

"If we cannot repair them, we have to shut them down," Vitrenko said of the gas connections. "Sometimes an entire block [can be affected]. It can be as dangerous." SEE GAS ON A9

Historic synagogue and its rabbi help tens of thousands find safety in Kyiv

BY HEIDI LEVINE AND SIOBHAN O'GRADY

KYIV, UKRAINE — A fleet of white vans pulled up to central Kyiv in darkness just after 9 p.m.

The passengers stepped out bleary-eyed, clutching their luggage, pets and young children. They had survived the last two weeks in catastrophic conditions in the besieged city of Chernihiv — then endured an hours-long journey on dangerous roads to the capital.

Now, at the historic Brodsky Synagogue, they had finally reached safety.

The curfew and sabbath were well underway, but at the door to greet the hundreds of civilians pouring out of the convoy was the bearded jovial man who helped arrange their journey: Rabbi Moshe Azman.

"Some said they didn't eat for three days," Azman said.

The evacuees from Chernihiv, many of whom had lived underground to avoid an aggressive Russian shelling and bombing campaign, are among the tens of thousands of people Azman said he has helped to move from dangerous areas in the past month. On the night of March 18, they shuffled through the synagogue, passing by a large silver menorah before settling in the prayer hall, where they rested and warmed up before being relocated to the

Cruz's last-ditch battle to keep Trump in power

Senator's effort alienated allies, led to questions about ties to lawyer

BY MICHAEL KRANISH

Sen. Ted Cruz was dining near the Capitol on the evening of Dec. 8, 2020, when he received an urgent call from President Donald Trump. A lawsuit had just been filed at the Supreme Court designed to overturn the election Trump had lost, and the president wanted help from the Texas Republican.

"Would you be willing to argue the case?" Trump asked Cruz, and the senator later recalled it.

"Sure, I'd be happy to" if the court granted a hearing, Cruz said he responded.

The call was just one step in a collaboration that for two months turned the once-bitter political enemies into close allies in the effort to keep Trump in the White House based on the president's false claims about a stolen election. By Cruz's own account, he was "leading the charge" to prevent the certification of Joe Biden as president.

An examination by The Washington Post of Cruz's actions between Election Day and Jan. 6, 2021, shows just how deeply he was involved, working directly with Trump to concoct a plan that came closer than widely realized to keeping him in power. As Cruz went to extraordinary lengths to court Trump's base and lay the groundwork for his own potential 2024 presidential bid, he also alienated close allies and longtime friends who accused him of abandoning his principles.

Now, Cruz's efforts are of interest

Cristina Kirchner impulsa un polémico blanqueo para pagarle al Fondo

DEUDA. Gravaría con un 20% los bienes en el extranjero no declarados; críticas de especialistas

La vicepresidenta Cristina Kirchner, a través del bloque de senadores del Frente de Todos, presentó dos proyectos que impulsan un nuevo blanqueo de bienes y cuentas en el extranjero no declarados, con el anunciado objetivo de generar un fondo para pagarle la deuda al FMI. El segundo proyecto propone modificar el secreto bancario para facilitar el rastreo de esos bienes.

Con el nombre de "aporte especial de emergencia", propone gravar con un 20%, a pagar en dólares, los bienes y capitales radicados en el exterior que sean repatriados en los primeros seis meses de vigencia de la ley. Desde el kirchnerismo aseguraron que los proyectos surgieron de la vicepresidenta.

Tras conocerse, la propuesta fue avalada por el presidente Alberto Fernández. Los proyectos fueron duramente cuestionados por la oposición, y por tributaristas y constitucionalistas, que los consideraron "jurídicamente inviables". Página 8

Escândalo derruba Ribeiro do MEC

Ministro deixa cargo após suspeita de que, a pedido de Bolsonaro, pastores tenham criado balcão de negócios na Educação

Milton Ribeiro chega ao prédio onde mora, em Brasília, após ser exonerado da Educação. Pedro Ladeira/Folhapress

Sob pressão há uma semana, Milton Ribeiro (Educação) foi exonerado ontem, em tentativa de reduzir o desgaste sobre Jair Bolsonaro. Terceiro a chefiar a pasta neste governo, Ribeiro cai após indícios de esquema informal de obtenção de verbas dentro do ministério, envolvendo dois pastores sem cargo público, o que incluiria pagamento de propina. Em carta, o ministro se disse inocente.

Prefeitos apontam que o balcão de negócios seria operado por Gilmar Santos e Arilton Moura, ligados a Bolsonaro, e priorizava liberar valores para gestores próximos a eles e a prefeituras indicadas pelo centrão.

Escolhido por ser pastor, Milton Ribeiro fez gestão ideológica B1

No último dia 21, a Folha revelou áudio no qual o ministro dizia privilegiar amigos de Gilmar Santos a pedido do presidente e sugeria haver uma contrapartida supostamente direcionada à construção de igrejas.

Bolsonaro chegou a dizer que punha a "cara no fogo" por Ribeiro, que é pastor, mas foi convencido por aliados a mudar de ideia após a bancada evangélica se afastar do titular do MEC. O escândalo também enfraquece o discurso de que não há corrupção no governo.

Por ora, a pasta fica sob o comando do secretário-executivo, Victor Godoy Veiga, mas aliados do centrão cobijam o cargo. Política A4 e A5

Bolsonaro demite presidente da Petrobras

O presidente da Petrobras, general Joaquim Silva e Luna, recbcu ontem a comunicação de que deixará o comando da estatal e será substituído por Adriano Pires, diretor do Centro Brasileiro de Infraestrutura (CBIE). A saída se dá após desgaste com Jair Bolsonaro (PL) por causa do mega-aumento de preços dos combustíveis.

Em quase um ano da gestão de Silva e Luna, a gasolina subiu 27%, e o diesel, 47%. A empresa chegou a segurar por quase dois meses o repasse da alta do petróleo no mercado internacional para evitar reajustes aos consumidores. O militar vinha sofrendo pressão pública de Bolsonaro para revisar os valores nas bombas.

A demissão por causa dos preços repete o desfecho do antecessor, Roberto Castello Branco, indicado por Paulo Guedes para chefiar a petroleira e tirado do cargo em fevereiro de 2021.

O nome de Adriano Pires não foi bem aceito pela ala militar, que é ligada ao ministro Bento Albuquerque (Minas e Energia).

Economista, Pires já era conselheiro do governo e agradava por ter defendido não repassar aos postos a volatilidade das cotações globais. Também é a favor da reforma do ICMS sobre combustíveis. Mercado A13

Essence : la flambée des prix bouleverse la vie des Français

Alors que les carburants continuent de s'envoler, des millions de consommateurs sont contraints de s'adapter, tant bien que mal. Un sujet devenu crucial, à quelques jours de la présidentielle.

Certains baissent la température dans le salon, d'autres s'équipent d'un vélo ou privilégient le covoiturage pour leurs trajets quotidiens. Les tensions sur les marchés internationaux continuent de faire grimper les prix du pétrole, du gazole et du gaz et perturbent, par ricochet, le quotidien de millions de Français. Certes, le gouvernement a annoncé son plan de résilience de près de 6 milliards d'euros, qui financera notamment la remise de 15 centimes par litre de carburant à partir du 1^{er} avril. Mais le pouvoir d'achat reste une préoccupation majeure. À deux petites semaines du premier tour, les candidats à la présidentielle ne s'y trompent pas : Marine Le Pen veut « rendre aux Français leur argent », Emmanuel Macron souhaite que « le travail paye plus » et Valérie Pécresse pose « un choc de pouvoir d'achat dans le pays ». En attendant ces jours meilleurs, le gazole se vend 2,11 euros le litre. De quoi en décourager beaucoup de partir en week-end...

Les marchands d'illusions

Depuis le spectaculaire retour de l'inflation dans le champ économique, les plus grands experts se perdent en conjectures. Faisons-nous face à un soubresaut, certes brutal, mais temporaire, lié au redémarrage en trombe de l'activité après la pandémie, auquel s'ajoute désormais la guerre en Ukraine ? Ou bien, entre crises à répétition et transition énergétique, sommes-nous entrés dans un nouveau cycle, durable, qui nous impose d'apprendre à vivre avec des prix élevés ? Convenons-en humblement : personne, aujourd'hui, n'en sait rien. Et, pour tout dire, les Français n'ont cure de ces querelles de spécialistes. En revanche, ils constatent, en réglant leur facture d'électricité ou en faisant leur plein de carburant, que les fins de mois deviennent plus difficiles. Comme les petites entreprises et les artisans, qui encaissent tout aussi durement le choc. La politique du chèque peut-elle résoudre un problème - la flambée des prix du pétrole et du gaz - qui trouve ses racines à des milliers de kilomètres de Paris et sur lequel la France n'a aucune prise ? Non, mais cela n'impressionne pas les marchands d'illu-sions. À commencer par le gouvernement, qui, après avoir pris en charge tous les effets de la crise sanitaire, et même davantage, a déjà consacré près de 30 milliards d'euros (!) à la lutte contre l'énergie chère. Ce n'est plus ici un coup de pouce pour passer un mauvais cap comme il en a existé dans le passé, c'est un changement d'univers. L'État-providence se mue en État-nounou. Aucun aléa ne saurait désormais assombrir la vie quotidienne. La puissance publique, cette nouvelle assurance tout risque, règle tout, pourvoit à tout. Les candidats à l'élection n'ont pas de mots assez durs pour critiquer cet électoralisme, mais promettent d'amplifier le mouvement au nom du pouvoir d'achat. Les « chèques inflation » ont de beaux jours devant eux. Pour quel résultat ? Résumons : l'État creuse ses déficits, les prix continuent de grimper, l'État creuse ses déficits, les prix continuent de grimper... ■
